

The service that xm radio provides is paid for by the People that subscribe to it and the companies that support it. Why should big Networks , their lobbyist, and thier money have any say so in what is on XM. We the public that pay for XM, do so so that we have the ablity to hear what we want, programs that are entertaining and informative. The big networks do not inform any more, they just play what they think the government wants them to. I for one love the fact that I can tune to a station and listen to the same one from coast to coast. The Weather Channel and the city weather channels are also helpful. The Big Networks don't inform me the way that XM does.

Why should the FCC not allow XM to have the ability to broadcast local weather and traffic in major cities when the people that are listening to it are paying for the right to do so. Also why should NAB have the right to dictate on what I can listen to even though I pay for the service.
